

Abstract of the Disclosure

A particle can be transported in a fluid stream, in particular a bloodstream. It includes a membrane which encloses a particle core. The membrane contains a number of functional elements, which are integrated in a matrix and which, in dependence on the concentration of a body substance, bring about substance transport through, and/or substance accumulation at, the membrane.